

To whom it may concern:

Austin Johnson worked for me for approximately 7 months in early 2013 when I was a partner/manager at White Rock Abbey in Dallas, TX. I hired him based on a trial period where he proved that he was a hard worker. He got along well with all his co-workers and was liked by all. He took a little time to adjust to waiting tables, but when I left the business he was one of the better servers we had. He was always willing to come in and cover a shift or stay late if needed. He walked to work most days and when the temperature heated up we discussed his hygiene. I remember talking to him once about it and it was not a problem after that time. He used to bring a second shirt and freshen up in the bathroom before his shift. In conclusion, he was a hard worker who cared about his job and his co-workers when he worked for me.
